Vizle did the poo on the new gravel path?

How did the spider get into the bath?

Sniff, sniff, sniff! With a wag of her tail,
Nell the Detective was hot on the trail.

The sock in the sofa,
the shoe in the shed,

The tumbledown teddy, the bounce-away ball.

Nell the Detective discovered them all.

Books about dinosaurs, books about knights,
Books about planets and meteorites,

Books about princes who turned into frogs,
Books about dragons – and books about dogs!

Into the classroom the two of them bursted
And found Mr Jones looking terribly worried.
He tugged at his hair and he let out a sigh.
Peter looked round and he started to cry.
Sniff, sniff, sniff! What was going on!
"The books!" cried out Peter. "The books have all gone!"

Everyone followed Detective Dog Nell.
She stopped at the traffic lights. What could she smell?

Sniff, sniff, sniff! Haddock and hay,
Pizza and penguins, and further away
The smell of the thief, and – how very exciting –
Thousands of pages, all covered in writing!

They flung the gate open, and Peter cried, "Look!"
For there sat a man with his nose in a book.
There were many more books poking out of a sack,
And the children yelled,
"Those are OUR books! Give them back!"

Sniff, sniff, sniff! The book thief looked sad.
"I'm sorry," he sniffled. "I know I've been bad.
Stealing is wrong – but I just meant to borrow.
I was planning to give all the books back tomorrow."

To borrow? To borrow? Nell pricked up an ear.
She barked, and the bark meant, "I've had an idea."

Thousands of books, from the floor to the ceiling.
The books gave the thief the most heavenly feeling.
He gazed in amazement. "Where am I?" he said,
And Peter replied, "In the library, Ted.
You can join if you want to – there isn't a fee,
And then you can take lots of books out for free."

And when it's a Monday, Detective Dog Nell
Visits the school with the wonderful smell.

Sniff, sniff, sniff! With a faraway look,
She smells and she listens to book after book:
