Labour hire companies

Other employment agencies who send employees on work assignments such as labour-for-hire, labour-on-hire, temping and contingent labour employers, or sub-contractors

Employers who send migrant employees on secondment to a controlling third party

Parent or umbrella companies which place migrant employees with a controlling third party, such as a subsidiary company that is a separate legal entity

The migrant worker's direct employer must be accredited.

You must have contact with AEWV holders:

Once per fortnight for the first 2 months of placement and then at least once per month, or

More frequently where appropriate, for example, where placement is for less than a month, or where there is a dispute or complaint in progress

You must apply for the accreditation suited to your business model

Due to the increased risk to migrant workers there are additional standards you must meet
